This study examined health insurance coverage in relation to several demographic characteristics in the Medicare population in the United States and in 1 state (Georgia). Most older Medicare enrollees (82 percent) had purchased at least one health insurance policy during the study year, although smaller numbers had family coverage or were covered by Medicaid. About 5 percent of the population lacked health insurance. The older adults who were uninsured were disproportionately located in rural areas. In 2000, the majority of older adults in Georgia were likely to be covered by employer-sponsored health insurance (92 percent), private insurance (62 percent), or Medicaid (16 percent). About 19 percent of the population lived in areas where health insurance rates for elderly people were significantly lower than the national average. Selective photodissociation of phosphines: electronic and structural characterizations. The photodissociation of diethyl, triethyl, and triisopropyl phosphines, $C(4)H(12)(PMe(3))$ (1), $C(6)H(12)(PMe(3))(2)$ (2), and $C(6)H(12)(PMe(2))(3)$ (3) (PMe = $PMePh(2)$) has been investigated using pulsed resonant two-photon ionization near the $I(1)P_i(u)$ state coupled to mass selective detection. By mass tagging the parent anions, produced from ions via electrostatic discharge and dissociation, the sequences of charge-neutral products $(M(+)(+) - M(+))$ and $(M(+)(+) - M(+))-$ ($M = P$ or C) are observed and are compared with the corresponding neutral-neutral fragmentation of di- and trialkyl phosphines $(CH(3)PMe(2))(n)$ (4) (PMe = $PMePh(2)$) and $CH(3)PCH(3)$ (5). Evident changes in the relative yields of the cations vs anions are observed upon changing the bonding between the light-absorbing unit and the residual cation (organic or inorganic P vs C). This behavior
