The European Commission has invested in the development of the European Certification System for Biobanks (ECCB), which was conceived to support the ERCB project. The objectives of the present study were to identify the main instruments and indicators used in certification of biobanks, to identify what aspects of biobanks certification are at stake in the certification process, and to identify the potential interest for certification of biobanks of the ECCB. Experts in biobanking from different regions of Europe were invited to participate in a series of Delphi rounds. In the first Delphi round, the instruments and indicators used in biobanking were identified. In the second Delphi round, the stakeholders in the certification of biobanks were identified. During the third Delphi round, respondents were asked which aspects of the ECCB were at stake in the certification of biobanks. Forty-two experts responded to the first Delphi round, 37 to the second, and 24 to the third Delphi round
