An original soundtrack to Dot Dash Dot, a fast-paced puzzle game for iOS and Android devices, which revives the tradition of classic text-based adventures Jigsaw Puzzle Game Soundtrack Lyrics: 1. (Legend Of) The Untouchables I was born into a family of professionals. I was raised with discipline, but something is missing in my life. Something in my heart I can't get over. You can never know what it's like to walk in my shoes. I cannot be like them, with my dark skin and my dirty ways. I don't belong in their world, I am a new breed of criminal. You can never know what it's like to walk in my shoes. I must carry on the legacy of the Untouchables. I can't be like them, with my dark skin and my dirty ways. They will hunt me down. 2. (What's A) Man's Got (No Right) To Look In A Woman's Eyes (What's A) Man's Got (No Right) To Look In A Woman's Eyes What's a man got (no right) To look in a woman's eyes What's a man got (no right) To look in a woman's eyes What's a man got (no right) To look in a woman's eyes Why is it, when I look in your eyes I see my soul reflected in them. 3. The Dark Side Of The Street The pen's in your hand. You ready to sing the hard truths. Tell me, I'm not a criminal. Sometimes I feel like a little man. I'm looking for the keys to the back door. But who's got the keys to the back door I'm looking for the keys to the back door, And the laws of the world won't let me in. I got a head full of bad thoughts, I'm looking for the keys to the back door, I got a head full of bad thoughts, And the laws of the world won't let me in. Got the dark side of the street, I'm the only man that's ever walked down

What's new in Battle Axe:

Preview: Why Hank Bauer Is Now The Pacers' Starting Point Guard It has been a largely positive offseason for Indiana, but while there have been roster additions, they haven't come at the expense of losing anyone from last year's group. That's not to take anything away from the Pacers' offseason, as they have many meaningful off-season tweaks coming that will not cost them anything, but their reliance on continuity should be heartening to the Paul George/George Hill contingent. This group returns largely intact, with one key exception that will not result in regression: they will expect a new opening point guard off the bench in the form of Thad Young. While his inclusion should leave the Pacers with two backup point guards to work around, the return of a starter at the spot could prove to be the real benefit for an already strong bench. Young's arrival comes at a perfect time for a Pacers team that was without a point guard in the first half of last season and struggled to find viable player options on the bench. For some of last year's reserves, the idea of No. 26 taking minutes from them may have been something they would have had to swallow. Now, they get to eat and move on. However, to better understand how the Pacers will make this move, let's take a look at everything they have coming back and what these additions mean for the Indiana Pacers. Paul George/George Hill: Side by Side Pascal Bieler/Getty Images The Pacers are at a crossroads in 2019, as the duo of Paul George and George Hill exist somewhere between marginal and tantalizing. Across the board, they took a step back from doing things in their own shadow. They underperformed, especially in terms of creating separation while opponents were defending them. The Pacers averaged 91.6 points per 100 possessions (per Basketball Reference) while George Hill was on the floor (via NBA.com). While his production was above the team average of 90.0, it was still well under their standards, which fell to 90.8 for the season. The second step was missing their usual crispness and dynamism. Per Synergy, they averaged nearly 19 minutes per game of off-ball movement, but their connections were less sharp. For example, on possessions entering the paint, the Pacers finished at 73.3 percent on their inside scoring opportunities off fast-break isolations
