: Alex Cross The Road to Canterbury: Alex Cross is a 2001 action-adventure film, starring Denzel Washington and Ashley Judd. It is the third and final installment in the Alex Cross film series, following Kiss the Girls and Along Came a Spider. The film marked a brief return to action films for director Richard Donner and second unit director, Menno Meyjes and was written by David Leitch and Terry Rossio. The basic storyline revolves around a real-life serial killer (played by Washington) and another movie-serial-killer (played by Judd). Plot Alex Cross, now a renowned detective, is called to a case of DNA tests with a body found in a third-rate motel called "The House". The motel owner, Margo Warner (Ashley Judd) was found bludgeoned to death. This is his last case, and he asks his friend, Sex Crimes Detective Gilroy (John Ashton), to assist. Alex believes it is not his killer, due to the presence of a trigger on the back of Margo's skull and of another trace of asbestos powder near the corpse. Sex Crimes Detective David Boyd (Denzel Washington) does not agree. Alex, Gil, and Boyd go to The House and there find a young boy Scott (Max Thayer) shot dead. It seems like anything is possible. Scott is a classmate of Ben Warner (Grant Show), Margo's son. But a day later, an obvious police investigation at the Warner house turns up several red flags. Alex questions David Boyd in his office. David realises that due to Alex being a cop, he will be looking over Boyd's shoulder. The files reveal that three months prior, an unidentified woman followed Ben from his home to a local gas station and injected him with an unknown substance. The case was closed and no trace recovered. The driver was a blond woman in her mid-twenties driving an older model purple car, with Ontario license plate 456943. After Ben's car was found, a widower neighbour comes to David's office to report that for three months, he saw a woman dressed in a nurse's uniform taking care of Ben at his house. A copy of the neighbour's report is found in the files with the one made three months ago. The case is assigned to consultant Irwin Silverstein (Robert Loggia), who remembers the fuel pump on the gas station had been a challenge in installation. Hours before the technician
