One being, he lived in the town and he did happen to be a pretty good pumpin' and dumpin' bowler. I like a film that brings people together.I had a fantastic time at the auto race. It was a sight to behold for sure. My daughter and I are in the process of putting together a short series of car races. We have a couple more "Holidays At Heartland" yet to go.After the race it was off to the Indoor Bowling Alley. I'll be damned if I didn't hustle my  off and get my final game in...then I only decided to do one more round. Hence, now you see, now you don't. One of the great things about the Midwest is...you get to either work or play, no in between.Q: sum of all the elements in a vector that are less than m I have a vector of arbitrary length and I'm trying to write a function that returns the sum of all the elements of the vector that are less than some threshold value. I'm having a hard time with the arguments. It would be nice to do this with just built in C++ functions, though I'll take anything that gets the job done. The vectors are std::vector. I'm not sure if that matters or not. A: If your vectors are already sorted, you can use std::accumulate which is the C++ standard library version of the already existing equivalent in the stdlib. If they're not already 0cc13bf012
