Q: Can I use Spring MVC's AssertJ at runtime, even during runtime? Let's say I have a running Java application with Spring MVC, that has a controller that processes requests. When my controller processes a request, I want to be able to do a few things: Check if the request path is as expected. Do some things depending on the request path. Log error if the request path is invalid. Log error if the request path is not what expected Given that I am processing a request during runtime, does Spring MVC provide some kind of functionality to do these things? Is this the correct way to be doing things, and what would be the correct way to do it?

A: The info below is from a MWE example:

```

@Controller public class MyController {
    @RequestMapping(method = RequestMethod.POST) @ResponseBody
    @ExceptionHandler(IncorrectRequestException.class) public String processRequest(@RequestBody MyRequestObject myRequestObject) { //... return null; } @RequestMapping(method = RequestMethod.GET) public String processRequest(HttpServletRequest request, HttpServletResponse response) { //... return null; } } AssertJ listener class public class MyAssertListener implements AssertionErrorHandler { private static final Logger LOG = LoggerFactory.getLogger(MyAssertListener.class); @Override public void handle(Throwable assertionError) { LOG.debug("Exception was caught", assertionError); } } Testing myApp String requestMapping = "/myapp/paths"; String controllerName = "myController

Clinic: the differences between the various types of myoma: a statistical study. The aim of this work was to study the possibility of distinguishing the various forms of myoma by the different ages of the patients, the different numbers of myoma per patient, the total weight of the myoma and the quantities of various muscle cells. A total of 2062 myomas were removed from 1625 patients. Myomas were classified according to the following criteria:

- 1) Total weight (g) of the myoma;
- 2) Number of myoma per patient;
- 3) Age of the patients.
- 4) size of the myoma (cm).
- 5) Thickness of the myoma (mm).
- 6) The quantity of various muscle cells (g) per mg of muscle.

The data obtained in this study confirm:

- 1) age and size of the myoma, respectively, are correlated;
- 2) the total weight of the myoma is not a function of age;
- 3) the number of myoma per patient is correlated with age and size of the myoma;
- 4) the size of the myoma is positively correlated with age and number of myoma
