The inner boundary is placed at a constant value equal to ${r_{\rm in}}=3.5\ {\rm km}$. The present invention relates generally to the art of sensing fluid flow in a well. More specifically, the invention relates to an apparatus and method for sensing fluid flow in a high temperature environment using magnetic fields. A variety of wellbore fluid flows can be sensed to monitor various conditions in a well. For example, fluid flow monitoring is typically used to measure fluid flow rates of production or injection fluids, which is typically accomplished using mechanical flow rate sensors such as flow meters. A number of mechanical flow rate sensors are available and each type is specifically designed for operation under different conditions, such as in the presence of hard particles. Magnetic flow measurement using

The West Indian Ocean basin is composed of various ecosystems in which several prominent coral reefs are found. Considering the global importance of this ecosystem, current understanding of the water-plant interactions that take place in these seas is of utmost importance. A literature review on the water-plant relationships of the West Indian Ocean was conducted using the Thomson Reuters' Web of Science database to identify all the relevant scientific papers. A total of eight main groups of study were identified: phytoplankton production, coral reef growth, herbivorous fish production, diatoms as indirect coral reef biocontrol agent, coastal dynamics (e.g., upwelling intensity), coral bleaching, and the benthic dynamics of sea-water reefs. The pool of documents that were considered suitable for assessing the water-plant relationship in the West Indian Ocean was heterogenous, mainly because of a lack of studies. The review showed that there is a clear diversity in water-plant interactions between the West Indian Ocean and its adjacent seas, but lacks generalizations. While coral reefs are known to be a significant part of the water-plant dynamics, there are still large knowledge gaps, in particular regarding phytoplankton dynamics. This review highlights the fact that water-plant relationships in the West Indian Ocean have not been well explored as a whole and therefore research is necessary. As such, we suggest conducting thorough and comprehensive surveys in all the West Indian Ocean basins in which benthic and epipelagic studies should be included.Preliminary investigations of a basic life support training program for Dutch paramedics. A Dutch national basic life support (BLS) training program for paramedics was conducted to assess the feasibility of developing a national BLS training program for paramedics. A
