and it works. However, now my real question is that, in general, how do I find the largest  $(n,n,n)$  matrix I can write as the product of two smaller  $(n,n)$  matrices? A: You should find that  $(n-1) \times (n-1)$  matrix as a  $n \times n$  matrix by placing the first  $n-1$  numbers on the diagonal, the next  $n-1$  on the main diagonal, and the last on the last diagonal, and the last  $n-1$  on the last. For a specific example: Let  $n=4$ . Place  $1,2$

I need to set the type of an array of Engine objects every time the user presses a button. In a separate class I have an array called "enginePointers" of Engine objects. How do I pass the value of type to the setter method in the Engine class so that the array is automatically filled up with the type the user chose? Thanks! A: You can use a constructor. class Engine { public enum Type { TYPE1, TYPE2, TYPE3, TYPE4 } private Type type; public Type getType() { return this.type; } public void setType(Type type) { this.type = type; } } //... class SomeClass { public static void main(String[] args) { e79caf774b
