Field of the Invention The invention generally relates to computers and, more particularly, to computer-implemented methods, systems, and computer-usable programs for determining the reputation of a node in a computer network. B. Description of Related Art As is well known in the relevant arts, computer networks have become indispensable tools in our daily lives. While generally operated with a multitude of personal computers or devices, such networks have become increasingly popular in the online world. Indeed, on-line networks, such as the Internet, have become ubiquitous and virtually every business or individual has an Internet account. Such networks are typically accessed through a Web browser on a local client computer or a Web browser on a remote client computer via a browser on a remote server computer. A domain name service (DNS) server converts Internet domain names into Internet protocol (IP) addresses. One of the most common services provided by DNS servers is known as the Domain Name System (DNS) Look-Up or Resolve Service. The names returned from the DNS servers may be associated with files, for example, the directory listing for a Web server. It is in this way that a Web browser can find a web site through the use of a URL that corresponds to the name of the Web site. Given the explosive growth in online user activities, the performance of the DNS servers and associated network equipment in providing efficient user traffic is imperative. No longer does a DNS server require the capacity or functionality of a general-purpose computer to perform the DNS Look-Up/Resolve function. Rather, improved DNS functionality is being achieved through the integration of Internet packet networks and associated equipment with specialized DNS equipment. However
