One-step synthesis of zinc oxide nano-particles in the presence of nonionic polymers and their quantum size effect. A new simple polymeric solution method, one-step synthesis, was used for the preparation of ZnO nano-particles by simple precipitation in the presence of polyvinylpyrrolidone (PVP) and polyethylene glycol (PEG). The effects of solvent type, oleic acid (OA) and surfactant concentration, and reaction temperature were systematically investigated and optimized. The size of ZnO nano-particles was easily controlled by adjusting the reaction conditions, which was characterized by X-ray diffractometer (XRD), transmission electron microscopy (TEM), scanning electron microscopy (SEM), atomic force microscopy (AFM), scanning transmission electron microscopy (STEM) and Fourier transform infrared spectroscopy (FT-IR).

By further employing water instead of ethanol as co-solvent, the size of ZnO nano-particles was decreased. Furthermore, the morphology of ZnO nano-particles was improved as the reaction temperature increased. At room temperature, ZnO nano-particles with average diameter of approximately 18.8 nm were
