1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a method and apparatus for the formation of devices for the dilation and protection of vaginal walls and more specifically to dilation and protection of a vagina after a medical procedure such as hysterectomy and also improves the esthetic appearance of the vagina after hysterectomy.

2. Description of the Related Art

Hysterectomy is a common operation that is performed to remove a uterus as a consequence of abnormal tissue growth.

Hysterectomy is often the only effective course of treatment for the removal of uterine fibroids, adhesions, cancers of the lining of the uterus, and/or other abnormalities of the uterus.

Hysterectomy is not a life-threatening procedure but a long term post-procedure complication includes problems with loss of vaginal wall support and/or dilation. Hysterectomy can also lead to a loss of vaginal wall support, which can cause problems of vaginal prolapse, a condition in which the vagina, and any uterine or pelvic floor support that may have been present, descends or prolapses into the vagina. A prolapse of the vaginal wall can result in difficulties with urination, bowel prolapse, pelvic pressure, and the loss of sexual satisfaction. In addition to these health concerns, a prolapse of the vaginal wall can have a negative impact on the woman's appearance. A common approach to preventing prolapse of the vaginal wall is to place a graft in the vagina that physically supports the wall against the vaginal front wall, providing a vaginal lift for the prolapsing vaginal wall. Examples of vaginal tissue grafts include intervaginal and preservice acellular human dermis, amnion, omentum, and cadaveric fascia lata and pericardium. However, often the graft, once placed, does not stay in position for a long time due to resorption by the body. U.S. Patent Application Publication No. 2003/0216797 discloses a hydrocolloid vaginal tissue graft. In U.S. Patent Application Publication No. 2003/0216797 a hydrocolloid is in situ cross-linked with hyaluronan or chondroitin and hyaluronic acid. The hydrocolloid layer is formed within 10 seconds of mixing of the components. Hydrocolloid systems are non-permanent implants that are typically not sutured to Medical decision making: a model for elderly cancer patients. As the population of elderly people grows there will be increased numbers of cancer patients in this group. It is essential for general practitioners to be cognizant of the psychological needs of these patients, and in particular to observe closely their medical decision making. This paper describes the development of a model which explains the role of patient and practitioner in medical decision making, with particular reference to the elderly cancer patient. It is a development of a paper presented to the Royal College of General Practitioners in England in 1986.

A model is proposed that helps to explain the events and processes involved in making medical decisions, and which can be used by the practitioner to consider which of his patients are likely to benefit from discussion of options with a third party, the patient's relative or a specially trained health care worker.
