Bernstein/Getty Images Many prospective NHL fans don't know the difference between a defenseman and a forward. Let them think that way for five more seconds. During the 2014 Stanley Cup Finals, the San Jose Sharks and the Los Angeles Kings faced off in a seven-game series, with seven different goalies splitting the load. So I've decided to help. When the going gets tough, let's all hold hands and be cool. On May 5, a couple weeks before the start of the regular season, I began looking at some ratings. According to Corsica Hockey, the Kings have a better offensive team than the Sharks. But the Sharks are just a little bit better on the defensive end. I studied the 2014-15 Corsica data, some of that data from last season and some of the data that I've developed over the years to create a formula to try to determine the best team in the league. First, I calculated four stats for each team: The score-adjusted Corsi percentage is a number between 0 and 100. It's the chances the team has taken on the offensive and defensive zone. A score-adjusted Corsi percentage of 100 is perfect. The percent of successful passes is the number of successful passes divided by the total number of passes. The Corsi differential is the percent of successful passes that are registered by the team on the offensive zone, minus the percent of successful passes that the team gives up in the defensive zone. The Fenwick/60 is the number of chances the team has created to score per 60 minutes. The difference between Fenwick/60 and Corsi is score-adjusted Fenwick/60, which
