| Ebudon Poncen Tadpoles are special type of fish which is generally absent in most other marine environments and of course its unlike fin fish living in saltwater. I have tadpole swam as a kid and in recent times I can't refrain from chasing them, as even though I'm quite sure there's no food hiding in them and I still dive inside anyway. The first time I ever tried it is in Ebudon, Chiba and is quite a long story. If you're interested to read more I'll definitely write a separate post for that later on. But today we have Tadpole Swimming here because it's quite different from any other I've ever experience before. Me swimming inside a tadpole. During tadpole swim, you have 2 options: submerge yourself in water, and stretch your body till you don't notice you're in water

Small alger like this isn't good enough, filling it up to the edge of the cupboard will make it unstable. Step 2: With your hand just slightly dip your hand into the water and gently touch the container. It should move quite easily and not spill water out of the container. Step 3: On the edge of the cupboard, use a tool to make some space. Then put your hand in, without fear of getting the container wet because the water should be soaked well enough from earlier. Step 4: Once it is deep enough, lift your chin up and align it with the edge of the counter/cupboard, then gently (and slowly!) put down your chin so that the space created, will swallow you. Step 5: Lift your chin up again and slowly dip your chin down below the surface of the water. It may feel painful at first and you may still not be comfortable so you may need to practice till it feels natural. At least for me, the first time it was a bit too big/uncomfortable and I felt like i'm stuck inside of a big bubble but once I practiced, it got the trick. To tell you guys, even the first time I sunk into the water, I still don't know what happened but
