Q: How to make a quantile/percentile plot in ggplot2? I use the command `qqplot(EVLIN~v1, sort(svm_lm$dev[,2:4]), stat = "identity", geom = "smooth", method = "loess")` to plot quantile models. It works well, but ggplot gives me a warning, because the model is not complete. The warning is "Model contains only the most recent 89 observations". I tried to manually calculate the required 88 values, but I cannot convert the first 100x variables to factor or discrete values, because I want to make this model interpretable. Can you help me? A: Dummy code. You can define your desired numbers in your dataset and then perform the quantile calculation. d

Is there any way to get the index of the array which has the lowest probability? I am considering an array of sorted data and trying to find a random index with lesser probability. A: You can use: $min = NULL; $min_probability = NULL; foreach ($array as $value) { if ($value A typical multi-speed, dual clutch transmission uses a combination of two friction clutches and several dog clutch/synchronizers to achieve "power-on" or dynamic shifts by alternating between one friction clutch and the other, with the synchronizers being "pre-selected" for the oncoming ratio prior to actually making the dynamic shift. "Power-on" shifting means that torque is transferred from one rotating member to another in the transmission in a manner that is efficient in terms of losses and achieves a desired gear ratio. "Dynamic" shifting in a dual clutch transmission means that the gear ratios available to the driver are altered by engaging different gear clutches. In a dual clutch transmission, a particular gear ratio is typically attained by clutches which need to be released or engaged in a particular order. Between sequential shifts, the ratio condition for the clutches need to be coordinated with the ratio condition of the synchronizers to avoid torque shocks and ensure that the synchronizers are timed properly for the next ratio.
