creating my own numerical structure in order to be able to create pseudo-variables in my programs. The idea is simple: I have a fixed-length text file that, when given the value of a variable I define, it should return the appropriate value. One important property I need is to be able to represent numbers as strings (the values are given as strings from the file). Here is what I came up with so far:

import os, sys
def file_exists(filename): """ Returns true if a file exists """ return os.path.isfile(filename) def read_file(filename): """ Returns a dictionary with the file values """
    d = {}
    d["/"] = "file" # file path
    fp = open("file.txt", "r") lst_file = fp.readlines()
    try: fp.close()
    except: fp.close()
    d["/"] = lst_file[0]
    for i in lst_file: # i = lst_file[i] d["/"] = int(i)
    return d
```
