KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Sure, while the best of the best placed, but perhaps unnoticed, in the 2012 college football playoffs, but you won't see the 2013 draft class taken with any of those teams in the realignment. As the NFL draft approaches, the Kansas City Star is taking a look at the five teams that would be better off without the best player in the class in their defensive line. They will be joined by the NFL Draft Report, a video series from Sports Illustrated. Greg Robinson (Titans) Cincinnati Bengals: At this point the choice is between drafting Robinson or, in my opinion, a much better option, Geno Smith, which would provide an immediate option at quarterback. Assuming he performs at Oregon State or USC, Smith would be starting day one. New York Jets: Robinson's value is dropping by the day, which is why there are visions of the Bengals drafting him in the third round of the draft if he falls that far. If not, a secondary quarterback isn't the worst option. Buffalo Bills: The most likely scenario sees them trading the pick to Miami for Rex Ryan. That's a low-risk/high-
