According to a YouGov poll for Tages-Anzeiger newspaper, a majority of 55 percent want to remain in the EU, while 45 percent want to leave. Turnout is expected to be high, as many voters were undecided about the issue only a few days ago. "The result is fantastic," Michael Grabner, a Swiss politician in charge of European affairs, told Tages-Anzeiger. "It's important that the people can vote on this. It shows that the Swiss people oppose the EU a lot more than people in other EU countries realize." Many EU officials and citizens fear a political backlash in other European countries if they threaten countries like Switzerland and Luxembourg, which make up the EU's biggest tax haven. "In the case of Brexit, the government in London confirmed that it is a country that wants to leave." Timid Italo, a local resident, told Tages-Anzeiger. "Now the big question is: Where is the exit and what will the exit look like?" The result comes days after Britain's unexpected vote to leave the EU. Brussels has held a "no deal" Brexit, which can be damaging, off-the-scale unpopular with business and could badly hit the Swiss economy, since the EU is one of Switzerland's biggest trading partners. With Swiss voters having said yes, the EU wants a positive outcome so Swiss citizens don't suffer due to Brexit and so Swiss products don't suffer from higher import taxes. The EU is already weighing a possible revocation of the passporting rights for Swiss financial services firms, including Swiss Re, that permits them to trade freely in EU markets, before Brexit.
