□ This template is based on a guide to feature prioritization and the features prioritization matrix. It can be used to record feature requests and prioritization of these requests. It can also be used to plan product roadmaps, at various levels of detail. The matrix is designed to give some indication of priority (in terms of what features are high or low priority) as well as explain why this priority was chosen. □ It consists of two templates: • The feature prioritization matrix itself. The columns list features according to the priority they are given, and the rows list the features (according to the description) on the page. As you select a row, the highest priority features are highlighted. • The roadmap templates have a matrix embedded into them. They may be viewed in Microsoft PowerPoint. To display the roadmap template in Microsoft PowerPoint: □ Go to View in Microsoft PowerPoint. □ Select Other tab, choose Roadmap templates, and then open the roadmap you want to create. □ In the PowerPoint roadmap template, there is a matrix displayed in the center of the slide. □ This template can be adapted for various purposes. One purpose would be to capture all of your ideas. Another purpose would be to prepare an actual roadmap. □ For a full explanation of this template, the feature prioritization process, and the matrix, please visit the following link: Roadmap White Paper Description: □ This template contains a roadmap white paper with information on the components of a roadmap as well as other related materials. The white paper and templates are available in Word, Excel, and PowerPoint formats. Feature Prioritization Roadmap Matrix

In this template, you can create an effective roadmap matrix that shows all the features for a product. It features prioritization in columns based on Gantt chart, Flow chart, Apriori chart and Trello board. The rows are numbered based on levels and metrics and this way each row represent a feature, a product or a project. Each column can be created from one or multiple feature requests which are linked to a roadmap column, a product or a project and features in a column will be assigned a priority. The prioritization of a feature can be done using any of the graphical charts mentioned above. You can select the chart type, enable legend and include or hide columns and rows. This Excel spreadsheet also includes a dashboard view of features, a product and a project. The sample features priority matrix is attached. You can use this as a template and customize it to add new features and provide a better representation. Features List: 1. Automated RFP Create an Excel Spreadsheet and download the features list from a website or CSV file. 2. Create a Trello Board and add your product, project and features to it. The Trello board has the roadmap and other features written in a column. 3. Features: Features are the basic building blocks of a product. They can be product dependent. Example: A To-Do list app would have features like To Do List, To Do Items, Checklists etc. In this matrix, each feature is a column in the matrix. Features can have priority (via labels) and these can be further classified into two categories: 1. High Priority Features 2. Low Priority Features Features can also be tagged (example: for this tool, tagged as "ready", "in development", etc) so that they can be noted. The priority and tags can then be noted in the Excel spreadsheet and are used to prioritize the features in the matrix. 4. Trello Boards: We can create Trello boards based on project, product, organization, customers, etc. These boards are used to track and manage the list of features on a product. 5. Roadmap Columns: Roadmap columns are used to track and maintain a long-term product roadmap for a product. 6. Product Column: The product column can be used to show a snapshot of a product at a point in time. 7. Project Column: The project column can be used to show
