Q: setting up a jquery event handler on multiple div elements with a common class I'm trying to figure out how to set up a jQuery event handler for a number of div elements with a specific class name. I have this code right now: `$('.ui-state-default').live("click", function() { alert("hello"); });` I'd like to be able to add a second line of code for any other class I specify such as this: `$('.ui-state-default').live("click", function() { alert("hello"); }).live("click", function() { alert("hi"); });` Is this possible? A: Yes, you can do this by combining the `.live()` method with the `.addClass()` method. This allows you to use a single event handler on multiple elements. This is illustrated below: `$('.ui-state-default').live("click", function() { alert("hello"); }).addClass("ui-state-highlight"); $('.ui-state-highlight').live("click", function() { alert("hi"); });` This may not be the most efficient solution, but it should work fine for most situations.

A: To expand on what Eddie said (the `.live()` method doesn't know anything about the class it's attached to): `$('.ui-state-default').live("click", function() { alert("hello"); }).live("click", function() { alert("hi"); });` is the same as: `$('.ui-state-default').live("click", function() { alert("hello"); }).live("click", function() { alert("hi"); });` unless you call `.live()` multiple times.

A: You can call `.addClass("ui-state-highlight")` `$('.ui-state-default').live("click", function() { alert("hello"); }).live("click", function() { alert("hi"); });`
