Zoofilia is a term used for mating between human beings and animals, where the act is made without consent of the animal. The term zoophilia was first used in 1897, though the idea of having sex with animals is far older. Though often a consensual act where both parties enjoy it, in some countries nonconsensual sex with animals is treated as a form of abuse and severe punishment may result. In 2004, the U.S. congress passed the Zoophiles Registration Act, making it illegal to have sex with animals in the country, with penalties of up to three years in prison and fines of up to $25,000. However, the same law, while making sex with animals a felony, does not prevent their purchase or trade, nor does it prevent pets from being taken to zoophiles, and some zoos and safari parks promote the use of animals for such purposes. Laws limiting the number of zoo animals kept in a single zoo enclosure are rarely enforced; they are frequently broken for economic reasons. Enforcement of this law has been curbed by the number of animal rights activists on the Internet. Animals used in zoos in the U.S., particularly primates, elephants, and monkeys, are routinely traded illegally to other parts of the world where they may be used for entertainment, for use in research labs, or for personal enrichment, and sometimes they are imprisoned or die for the purposes of sex. Scientific research is often carried out on animals, either to study their genetics or test new medicines. For example, the American Association of Zoo Veterinarians recommends that drug companies seek permission from the International Association of Pharmacology and Toxicology before testing on animals. Many species are sold for a variety of other purposes, including sexual exploitation. Zoofilia, this is the kind of animal sex that you enjoy watching. The best thing about zoophilia is the fact that both the animal and the human is enjoying this activity and thus they are having the most precious time in life.
