Although Photoshop Lightroom itself isn't multitasking agnostic like desktop apps, the mobile app can handle multiple users and multiple catalogs at the same time. You can also use a smart Slow Shutter Controller to increase the number of photos that can be processed per second. The Smart Sharpen tool makes use of your camera's in-camera setting for sharpness. If you have a tripod, then this is the way to sharpen your video. If you move the frame around with the tripod, then you'll see that the effect will be variable. In the RAW side of Photoshop, you can do more than you'll ever need to. The RAW Converter now has better controls for color managing, plus better overall processing. The Changes tool lets you see which edits to an image make it look better (and which make it look worse). Now your retouches can be toggled on and off without having to process the entire image. Best of all, you can now do so much more than a 2-year-old version of Photoshop could do. As other software applications offer 3D/VR design features – like Autodesk Fusion360 and 3Dsoft DesignSpark – I believe that 3D design is poised to take off.

Spanning multiple dimensions across the three visual dimensions, 3D design clicks into your brain to help you see more of the 3-dimensional world around your design. The biggest change in this version is the addition of integration with the Creative Cloud service. You see, Adobe now treats Lightroom as an application, and one of Adobe's staple services that used to be free is now included with the Lightroom 5.2. The Photoshop service used to come with the Creative Cloud, but once Adobe included Lightroom, they simply combined the two services, and you are now paying for two applications that used to be free. Color Curves—The earlier versions of the Photoshop family of programs had the option to adjust the shadows, midtones, and highlights independently. To be precise, there was a separate panel for each of the three. In the latest versions, the ability to use a single Color Curves panel was added. However, the curves panel is found within the Layers panel. You can use the Layers panel to adjust the curves of the shadows, midtones, and highlights. You may also use a single swatch, which gives the ability to adjust the three independently. However, the Color Curves panel contains a small swatch, which is the main interface for changing the colors of the shadows, midtones, and highlights.
