Its software landscape is changing rapidly, and customers are discontent with the last version of Lightroom. The new version of the software has garnered lots of good reviews on the internet, but it is not easy to choose whether to upgrade or not. If you ask me, I will not recommend upgrading from Lightroom 4 to Lightroom 5. Rather, I recommend using Adobe products Camera Raw and Photoshop for the fine-tuning of images before importing them into Lightroom. We are, after all, talking about image editing here, and Lightroom bundles other features, like grids, font tools, layers, and image adjustment which you can use for other purposes, too. If you are still using Lightroom 4, or Lightroom 3, and already love it, simply upgrade to Lightroom 5. Apart from the new UI design, Lightroom 5 provides the same features you have grown accustomed to. If you are thinking of moving to Lightroom 5, the same holds good if you are already using Lightroom 4. Otherwise, you will have to downgrade to Lightroom before you upgrade, although it's never a problem. Where Lightroom 5 often excels is where other software fails. The UI is modern and easy to use, with live previews in the histogram and RAW/jpg conversion. Furthermore, Lightroom tends to save data faster and is a lot more quick. Finally, a great compliment to the outstanding performance of the C100 is the fact that it works flawlessly with all four of my other most-used accessories. They all complement each other in ways that most other pen and tablet combos are incapable of.
