The characteristic pattern of Chinese society is usually referred to as the social system of "Confucianism" or "Confuciusism." s of Work and Power in Contemporary China Existing research into the s of Work and Power in Contemporary China in China has mainly been limited to either general studies of the modern Chinese society or studies of the modern Chinese and other East Asian societies. This is mainly because the best-known and most-studied body of China-related literature is the Fei Xiaotong anthology and critique of Fei Xiaotong. s of Work and Power in Contemporary China This thesis explores the current status of the power structure in modern Chinese society using Fei Xiaotong's theory. Major social problems such as gender imbalance, poverty and inequality, inequality within the health care, and the incapability of the government to address these problems are the most prominent issues discussed in the thesis. s of Work and Power in Contemporary China The study investigates the relationship between gender and power in modern China using the Fei Xiaotong critique of Fei Xiaotong, as well as the feminist sociological theories of Michel Foucault, Nancy Fraser, and Miranda Fricker. Two key methods of research are used in the study. These are the distribution of the Fei Xiaotong corpus within two important databases, the China Book Abstracts Database and the Chinese Academic Journals System, and the collection of the data and data analysis through the use of questionnaires and interviews. s of Work and Power in Contemporary China The results of the quantitative analysis of Fei Xiaotong's corpus were primarily based on a comparison of Fei Xiaotong's gendered comments to a control group of texts written by his contemporaries. This comparison showed a series of significant differences and revealed specific power differences in Fei Xiaotong's corpus, as compared to his contemporaries. s of Work and Power in Contemporary China The qualitative analysis of Fei Xiaotong's corpus involved the collection of data through interviews with scholars in the field of gender studies, and the analysis of Fei Xiaotong's corpus focusing on the similarities and differences of Fei's gendered style and rhetoric. An interdisciplinary approach involving research from three areas was also applied in the analysis: gender, power
