The Boy With The Most Everything. Over the past months, I've been giving a workshop, "Beyond The Second Sex: Feminist Perspectives on Gender and Sexuality, " to graduate students at Sarah Lawrence College. The reaction to this workshop has been extraordinary. And not only among the young adults. Adults from my immediate family, including my parents, have read and commented on this text in a way that I have scarcely imagined. In the past, I have tended to make explicit what I consider to be the deep structures of cultural capitalism, with a view to making these structures visible. But as the exercises in this workshop have shown, cultural capital works in so many ways that it is impossible to see its patterns clearly, with the result that we end up in a kind of political
